ENDURING CHORDS
To the Editor of The News:
(Can the members of the Westbrock Singing Boys or the Inland Chorus forget their past leader, Richard Westbrock? No, never. Nor will the parents of these boys and girls forget him, though in person he is no longer with us.
He had the ability to teach youth that "music is a language of tones," a means of communication. He knew how to produce that perfect pitch from their vocal boxes, the distinguishing factor of tone versus noise.
And all this was accomplished through a willing obedience. In Mr. Westbrock boys and girls found an ideal. . . . Many of these boys and girls long dismissed from the chorus are singing when and wherever the opportunity presents itself. With a song in their hearts they are a happy people and "happy people are the greatest benefactors to society" . . . .
I feel that many parents join us in hoping that Richard Westbrock will have found that "Lost Chord" in Heaven.
